By CAPT. NORTON GODDARD, President of the Anti-Policy Society of New York City.

MONG many evils in city life policy is unique in that it can be suppressed. Work against it may have

It purports to be a lottery, but it is a cheat, and not in any proper sense gambling. It is simply a gross fraud upon people who have very little money, to whom it is held out as a possible means of getting more. ITS MANAGERS DEFRAUD WITH DELIB-

ERATE ARTIFICE.

In most policy shops the writer or operator will accept a play as low as one cent, and in no policy shop is two cents refused; this is to get the pennies of women and children. The policy writer or policy backer is AN OUTCAST AMONG THE GAMBLERS, and has a doubtful standing among thieves.

The results of putting a policy-shop out of business are sometimes as astonishing as they are delightful. Families in the neighborhood, whose children, while the shop was running, went barefooted and hungry, whose rent was always unpaid, and whose belongings were most of them at the pawnshop all of a sudden became prosperous, the children receive clothes and food, the landlord is paid, personal belongings come back from the pawnshop, and SELF-RESPECT SOON TAKES THE PLACE OF DEGRA-DATION.

The deluded "player" supposes that policy is conducted like a lottery—that 78 balls, numbered 1 to 78, are placed in a box, rolled around, and that a blindfolded person draws forth 12. This that the well bucket can be emptied drawing is supposed to take place in Kentucky, and the numbers to all at once into the ample receptacle be telegraphed to New York. There are two lotteries, the customers inside the eurb without its slopping understand-one called "Kentucky" and one "State"-and each is- over, while the part outside the curb sues two slips with lucky numbers daily except Sundays and holidays, is so shaped that the water thus

The "player" goes into a policy-shop and announces to the poured in all runs into the pail set "writer" what numbers he wishes to bet on, and hands him the stake. The usual way is to bet that three numbers which the player names will be found among the numbers of the next drawing, for instance, 3-41-44. The player must state whether he is betting that his three namely, a well sweep as a means of numbers will appear in the result column headed "Kentucky" or lowering and raising the bucket and a

"State," and if he wins he is paid 100 for 1. If the player wants a better chance, he does not name the column; but if he wins in that case he receives only 50 to 1.

Mathematically, the chance of naming three numbers out of twelve drawn from 78 is about one in 380.

Thus the odds against the player are almost four to one. But the men behind this swindle RESORT TO ARRANT FRAUD to deprive the player of even the normal fraction of a chance to win. THERE IS NO LOTTERY ABOUT THE SWINDLE, either in Kentucky or elsewhere. The men behind the game are in a syndicate, and they meet twice daily and select the numbers to be given out as the result of a lottery drawing.

The pathos of all this is that policy is not a gamble, not a lottery; it is a low and odious fraud. It depends for its dupes upon those least able to suffer from it. Seven cents, it has been calculated is the lowering and raising the bucket and a description. But the water from the satel spout. But the water from the well was quite uncassed. Like the water everywhere found it was excellent.

When a person becomes what is called a "policy fiend," he plays twice a day. How many of the poor it must hold in thrall can be estimated from the fact that the as indicated by the memoranda seized at his arrest, received $12,000 a day.

THE WELL-SWEEP.

Once Familiat in Yankerland, Now Supplanted by Modern Contrivances.

In the course of a 20-mile walk along the country roads in southern Connecticut there were seen by a visiting New Yorker recently only two well sweeps, once as common a feature of the landscape there as windmills are in Hol'and, says the New York Sun.

There were found a number of wells of the ordinary kind with two buckets at the ends of a roperunning on a wheel, and one or two wells of the windlass kind, with a bucket at the end of a rope wound up on a roller by the turning of a crenk, but in most cases the old oaken bucket in whatever manner it may have been used had been supplanted by the

At one of the wells at which in the course of this walk the two well sweeps were encountered there were found fixed in the well curb a steel spout. The old-fashioned well spout, it will be remembered, was of wood, and commonly so formed that care had to be used in pouring the water into it from the well bucket so as to avoid wasting it, inside the ourb or

The steel well spout is so shaped to receive it.

This well was, therefore, equipped at once with the most ancient and the most modern of well contrivances,
